After a chase of ten miles, a posse surrounded four bandits, who had held up a Lod! lewelry store and made off with $5,000 worth of jewels, killed one of them and wounded the other three. One of these days bandits will zet next to the fact that disturbing the peace and quiet of village life is a mighty dangerous business.

"One result of the high-skirt tendency and the disclosures resulting therefrom," observed the restaurant philosopher at luncheon today. Thas been to add weight to the contention of those who hold that perfection is seldem attained in this old world of ours."

"Brookhart Group Forms Organization To Work for Lowden," reads a headline in a Chicago paper. As we see it, such an organization should prove more of a liability than an asset to Mr. Lowden, in his campaign for the Republican presidential nomination. A Republican convention is going to hesitate a lot before permitting forces seeking the destruction of the Republican party to dominate it.

Holding that he was a member of the American legion and had fought in Europe throughout America's participation in the war, a Chicago confidence man drew a jail sentence of a year and a fine of $100 and costs when the records disclosed that he had been in prison all the time the soldier boys were over in Europe. It's not impossible that many more criminals holding out that they were members of the American logion are of the same brand.

Tuckahoe Abandons the Artistic.

The little village of Tuckahoe, up the state highway in Westchester county a short distance north of New York, will abandon its campaign to attain the highest and best in beauty and art this evening, at which time the memhers of the board of trustees of the village will accept the resignations of the members of the Municipal Art commission, made up exclusively of women headed by a young woman of decidedly artistic tastes and ideas. The way the Tuckahoe men soo it, the plan of making Tuckahoe a paradise of beauty came to smash because the entire commission membership was overly long on art.

Some months since the village president initiated the movement, and the commission was legalized with authority to exercise censorship over building plans, store window dressing and about all things which might add to or detract from, according to their treatment, the beauty of the village,

The commission started out enthusiastically by erecting signs, "Beautiful Tuckahoe," at the various approaches to the village. The county highway engineer removed them on the grounds that they disfigured the appearance of the highway and were superfluous if Tuckahoe really were beautiful, for visitors could see its beauty without the charts provided.

Somewhat discouraged, the ladies next turned their attention to shop windows. They took exceptions to the crude manner in which morchants displayed their goods, and were particularly severe upon a butcher's showing a promisceous display of calf's liver and pigs feet. The village president, who had inaugurated the movement, saw the stormeloud arising and basely described the good cause, and when the storm of mercantile wrath broke, the artistic women of Tuckahoe who were members of the commission found the entire village arrayed against their "highfalutin" notions" Their answer to the flood of mercautile protests to the village trustees was their resig nation as a body.

We do not offer this because of our interest in Tuckahoe, but because it is another chapter to the old, old story familiar in one form or another to the most of us. We arge the women folk to become interested in civic affairs, in civic betterment, in civic beautification, and when some of them, stirred by a lofty impulse to worthy civic accomplishment, undertake a campaign to attain the end sought, the men folks abandon them at the first sign of discouragement, the first evidence of opposition. They point out that it's the women's plan; "their idea, not ours." We have seen this elsewhere: we have seen it here at home.

Verily, mankind hasn't changed so much cince Mr. Adam set up the defense that Eve , handed bim the apple.

Railroad Passenger Business Losses

Figures compiled by the Interstate ( ummerce ; commission show that the railroads of the United States suffered a loss of about $345,- 1 000,000 in passenger business last year, which loss is attributed to the competition of private automobiles and motor has line. Of this amazing loss of business, $91,400,000 was rufof railroads, $46,100,000 by the southern and $207,000,000 by the western

The high mark in railroad passenger but tress was attained in 1920. Since that year the number of passengers carried up to this year has dropped decidedly, the loss ranging from fifteen per cent, in the Great Laken region to about sixty-eight per cent, in the southwestern region. The falling off during the same period has been about twenty two per cent, in the eastern dietrict, forty-two per cent in the conthern and forty seven per cent, in the western. This los has been sustained chiefly In short hand business, such husiness, of course, being that chiefly affected by motor compolition. On the one-mile basis, the loss in passengers carried has been fifteen per cent. in eastern ferritory, fwenty one per cent, in southern and thirty-eight per cent, in western, In the country as a whole it has been less than twenty-five per cent

The meeting of this problem would be a very easy matter, had the railroads been permitted to reduce train service accordingly; especially easy for the reason that such loss was largely sustained on short-haul business. But such was and is the attitude of the public and the authorities looking after the interests of the public and the feeling on the part of the rallroads that competition must be met that the reduction of train service in the country as a whole has been less than ten per cent., and in the western part of the country it has been less than four per cent.

The trends and changes in business are ever offering new problems along all lines, and the railroads are in no way exceptions to the rule. Just as the industrialist or the business man has to devise ways and means of meeting these changes, so must the transportation companies. But the industrialist or the business man has this advantage over a transportation company. Against all he has to content is competition. This looked after, he can meet the advanced cost of his goods by an increase in the selling price. If there is no demand for a certain line of goods, he can discontinue carrying it. He can go to another line to recoup the lesses sustained on the unprofitable line thus discontinued.

No such method of relief, however, is open to the transportation company. It can not raise its rates-its prices, to make good the comparison --- savo with the sanction of a federal commission. Nor can a transportation company discontinue its line, no matter how unprofitable it may be, at will. It must continuo the expense of maintaining such unprofitable line, if we are correct in our view, till the discontinuing of it has been sanctioned by government action. And these are some of the heavy handicaps suffered by the railroads. All of us have our troubles, it is true, but the railroads seem to have a trifle more than their fair share. The lord mayor of London tells the morchants over there that "if trade is to be vitalized, the traders must advertise." We couldn't have said it better ourself.

Prospect of Serene Old Age.

BY ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.

I am writing this, on my father's birthday. He is eighty-nine today. That is a wonderful age and yet it is not uncommon in my family. Last year an uncle died who was 101 years old.

Long life is an attribute of one family, just as short life is of another. Why should there be such

To begin with, there are fundamental physical differences. In my family, for instance, we happen to be log hodied, with deep chests and powerful hearts. Every one of us had to work and so dereloped the unseles. We live on simple food and few of us indulge in "course dinners." We are good steepers, go to bed early and open the windows to get fresh nir. I don't speak of these things to "brag" about

In my opinion any family can do quite as well, unless there are inherited physical conditions which make certain organs weak and the body fruil.
